Introduction

Aims

This document sets out National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People, which form the basis on which the new National Care Standards Commission will determine whether such care homes meet the needs, and secure the welfare and social inclusion, of the people who live there.

The national minimum standards set out in this document are core standards which apply to all care homes providing accommodation and nursing or personal care for older people. The standards apply to homes for which registration as care homes is required.

While broad in scope, these standards acknowledge the unique and complex needs of individuals, and the additional specific knowledge, skills and facilities needed in order for a care home to deliver an individually tailored and comprehensive service. Certain of the standards do not apply to pre-existing homes including local authority homes, "Royal Charter" homes and other homes not previously required to register. The standards do not apply to independent hospitals, hospices, clinics or establishments registered to take patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Regulatory Context

These standards are published by the Secretary of State for Health in accordance with section 23 of the Care Standards Act 2000 (CSA). They will apply from 1 June 2003, unless otherwise stated in any standard.

The Care Standards Act created the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC), an independent non-governmental public body, which regulates social and health care services previously regulated by local councils and health authorities. In addition, it extended the scope of regulation significantly to other services not previously registered, including domiciliary care agencies, fostering agencies and residential family centres.

The CSA sets out a broad range of regulation making powers covering, amongst other matters, the management, staff, premises and conduct of social and independent healthcare establishments and agencies.

Under the Care Standards Act the Secretary of State for Health has powers to publish statements of National Minimum Standards. In assessing whether a care home conforms to the Care Homes Regulations 2001, which are mandatory, the National Care Standards Commission must take the standards into account. However, the Commission may also take into account any other factors it considers reasonable or relevant to do so.

Compliance with national minimum standards is not itself enforceable, but compliance with regulations is enforceable subject to national standards being taken into account.

The Commission may conclude that a care home has been in breach of the regulations even though the home largely meets the standards. The Commission also has discretion to conclude that the regulations have been complied with by means other than those set out in the national minimum standards.

Structure and Approach

The National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People focus on achievable outcomes for service users - that is, the impact on the individual of the facilities and services of the home. The standards are grouped under the following key topics, which highlight aspects of individuals' lives identified during the stakeholder consultation as most important to service users:

- Choice of home
- Health and personal care
- Daily life and social activities
- Complaints and protection
- Environment
- Staffing
- Management and administration

Each topic is prefaced by a statement of good practice, which sets out the rationale for the standards that follow. The standards themselves are numbered and the full set of numbered paragraphs needs to be met in order to achieve compliance with the standard. Each standard is preceded by a statement of the intended outcome for service users to be achieved by the care home.

While the standards are qualitative – they provide a tool for judging the quality of life of service users – they are also measurable. Regulators will look for evidence that the standards are being met and a good quality of life enjoyed by service users through:

- discussions with service users, families and friends, staff and managers and others;
- observation of daily life in the home;

- scrutiny of written policies, procedures and records.

The involvement of lay assessors in inspections will help ensure a focus on outcomes for, and quality of life of, service users.

The following cross-cutting themes underpin the drafting of the National Minimum Standards for Care Homes for Older People:

- Focus on service users. Modernising Social Services (1998) called for standards that “focus on the key areas that most affect the quality of life experienced by service users, as well as physical standards” [4.48]. The consultation process for developing the standards, and recent research, confirm the importance of this emphasis on results for service users. In applying the standards, regulators will look for evidence that the facilities, resources, policies, activities and services of the home lead to positive outcomes for, and the active participation of, service users.
- Fitness for purpose. The regulatory powers provided by the CSA are designed to ensure that care home managers, staff and premises are ‘fit for their purpose’. In applying the standards, regulators will look for evidence that a home – whether providing a long-term placement, short-term rehabilitation, nursing care or specialist service - is successful in achieving its stated aims and objectives.
- Comprehensiveness. Life in a care home is made up of a range of services and facilities which may be of greater or lesser importance to different service users. In applying the standards, regulators will consider how the total service package offered by the care home contributes to the overall personal and health care needs and preferences of service users, and how the home works with other services / professionals to ensure the individual's inclusion in the community.
- Meeting assessed needs. In applying the standards, inspectors will look for evidence that care homes meet assessed needs of service users and that individuals' changing needs continue to be met. The assessment and service user plan carried out in the care home should be based on the care management individual care plan and determination of registered nursing input (where relevant) produced by local social services and NHS staff where they are purchasing the service. The needs of privately funded service users should be assessed by the care home prior to offering a place.
- Quality services. The Government's modernising agenda, including the new regulatory framework, aims to ensure greater assurance of quality services rather than having to live with second best. In applying the standards, regulators will seek evidence of a commitment to continuous improvement, quality services, support, accommodation and facilities which assure a good quality of life and health for service users.
- Quality workforce. Competent, well-trained managers and staff are fundamental to achieving good quality care for service users. The National Training Organisation for social care, TOPSS, is developing national occupational standards for care staff, including induction competencies and foundation programmes. In applying the standards, regulators will look for evidence that registered managers and staff achieve TOPSS requirements and comply with any code of practice published by the General Social Care Council.

Context and Purpose

These standards, and the regulatory framework within which they operate, should be viewed in the context of the Government's overall policy objectives for older people. These objectives emphasise the need to maintain and promote independence wherever possible, through rehabilitation and community support. A variety of specialist provision will be required to help achieve these objectives. Good quality care homes have an important part to play in that provision.

These standards have been prepared in response to extensive consultation and aim to be realistic, proportionate, fair and transparent. They provide minimum standards below which no provider is expected to operate, and are designed to ensure the protection of service users and safeguard and promote their health, welfare and quality of life.

Choice of Home

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 1 TO 6

Each home must produce a statement of purpose and other information materials (service users' guide) setting out its aims and objectives, the range of facilities and services it offers to residents and the terms and conditions on which it does so in its contract of occupancy with residents. In this way prospective residents can make a fully informed choice about whether or not the home is suitable and able to meet the individual's particular needs. Copies of the most recent inspection reports should also be made available. The statement of purpose will enable inspectors to assess how far the home's claims to be able to meet resident's requirements and expectations are being fulfilled. While it would be unreasonable and unnecessary to expect every home to offer the same range of facilities and lifestyle, older people do want a range of choice when they decide to move into a care home. By requiring proprietors to 'set out their stall', the problem of leaving choice to chance is overcome. There can be no room for doubt either on the part of the prospective resident, the inspector or the proprietor. In this way diversity and range of choice across the care home sector can be maintained. For example:

- if the home says it provides for the needs of people with dementia, it will have to make clear in the prospectus how this is done - for example, small group living and structured activities, with décor and signage helpful to people with dementia;
- if a home says it can cater for the needs of Muslim elders whose first language is not English, it must show that it can do so by, amongst other things, showing that it can prepare and provide halal food, offer links with the local mosque and provide appropriate washing facilities and demonstrate that it employs staff who speak appropriate languages;
- a home will make clear in its information materials whether it aims to offer residents a family-like environment at one end of the spectrum, or whether it offers hotel-style accommodation where residents live more independently from one another at the other.

The key must be the choice and the opportunity to exercise choice. This can only be achieved if full information is provided.

See: Choosing a Care Home, OFT (1998).

Health and Personal Care

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 7 TO 11

The health and personal care which a resident receives will be based on the individual's needs. It is, therefore, impossible to lay down standards to cover precisely every aspect of care required for all residents. Because of this, the assessment process and the care plan for the individual are seen as crucial in standard setting. What is found during the assessment process should be put into the service user's plan. The plan is the end point of the assessment of the individual. Care must then be delivered in accordance with the service user's plan for that individual. Thus the plan becomes the yardstick for judging whether appropriate care is delivered to the individual resident. It is a dynamic document, which will change as regular assessment of the resident reveals changing needs.

Often the initial assessment, which determines whether or not an individual goes into a care home, will be made by people outside the home. In laying down what the assessment should be based on, the national minimum standards do not seek to hold proprietors/managers to account for the actions of others. However, a resident should not go into a home without a full assessment having been made, except in the case of an emergency. The proprietor/manager and relevant professional staff within the home should be party to that full assessment and only accept a new resident if they feel the home can adequately meet the needs of the prospective resident as determined through that assessment.

Guidelines published by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society (1991), Age Concern (Levenson 1998), Royal College of Physicians (1997), the Royal College of Nursing (1996, 1997) and the Nursing and Midwifery Council (1992) are referred to or drawn on in the following section and should be adhered to.

Privacy and Dignity

The principles on which the home's philosophy of care is based must be ones which ensure that residents are treated with respect, that their dignity is preserved at all times, and that their right to privacy is always observed. Fundamentally, the test of whether these principles are put into practice or not will be a matter for the individual resident's own judgement:

- how am I treated by staff when they are bathing me and helping me dress?
- how do they speak to me?

- am I consulted in matters to do with my own care and matters that concern residents as a whole?
- are my wishes respected?
- are my views taken into account?
- do staff regard me as a real person with desires, hopes and expectations just like them?

However, not all residents will be able to make that judgement and communicate it to their relatives or representatives, the staff or inspectors. Other tests will have to be used which reflect the principles which must underpin all that goes on in the home. This section sets out a number of key standards which will enable managers and inspectors to judge the home's performance in relation to its governing philosophy. Guidelines published over the past 20 years have emphasised the importance of valuing privacy, dignity, choice, rights, independence and fulfilment. These values underpin the national minimum standards.

See: Good practice guides such as Home Life; Homes are for Living In; A Better Home Life; Creating a Home from Home.

Dying and Death

The process of dying and death itself must never be regarded as routine by managers and staff. The quality of the care which residents receive in their last days is as important as the quality of life which they experience prior to this. This means that their physical and emotional needs must be met, their comfort and well-being attended to and their wishes respected. Pain and distress should be controlled and privacy and dignity at all times preserved. The professional skills of palliative care staff can help homes ensure the comfort of residents who are dying. There are a number of specialist agencies providing practical assistance and advice, such as Marie Curie and Macmillan nurses, which can be called upon.

The impact of the death of a resident on the community of residents may be significant and it is important that the home ensures that opportunities are available for residents to come to terms with it in ways which the individual residents find comforting and acceptable. Thus opportunities for meditation and reflection and for contact with local and religious and spiritual leaders should be provided.

Residents should be encouraged to express their wishes about what they want to happen when death approaches and to provide instructions about the formalities to be observed after they have died. Cultural and religious preferences must be observed.

There should also be an openness and willingness on the part of staff to talk about dying and death and about those residents who have recently died. Staff themselves, especially young and inexperienced staff, may also need support at such times. The needs of family and friends should also be attended to. Because each individual will have their own preferences and expectations, it is impossible to lay down standards for observances and practices which can apply in every circumstance. However it is essential for homes to have clear policies and procedures about how they ensure that residents' last days are spent in comfort and dignity and that their wishes are observed throughout.

See: Counsel and Care (1995); National Council for Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care Services (1997).

Service User Plan

OUTCOME

- 8.8 Opportunities are given for appropriate exercise and physical activity; appropriate interventions are carried out for service users identified as at risk of falling.
- 8.9 Nutritional screening is undertaken on admission and subsequently on a periodic basis, a record maintained of nutrition, including weight gain or loss, and appropriate action taken.
- 8.10 The registered person enables service users to register with a GP of their choice (if the GP is in agreement).
- 8.11 The registered person enables service users to have access to specialist medical, nursing, dental, pharmaceutical, chiropody and therapeutic services and care from hospitals and community health services according to need.
- 8.12 Service users have access to hearing and sight tests and appropriate aids, according to need.
- 8.13 The registered person ensures that service users' entitlements to NHS services are upheld in accordance with guidance and legislation, including the standards in the National Service Framework, by providing information about entitlements and ensuring access to advice.

Medication

OUTCOME

Service users, where appropriate, are responsible for their own medication, and are protected by the home's policies and procedures for dealing with medicines.

STANDARD 9

- 9.1 The registered person ensures that there is a policy and staff adhere to procedures, for the receipt, recording, storage, handling, administration and disposal of medicines, and service users are able to take responsibility for their own medication if they wish, within a risk management framework.
- 9.2 The service user, following assessment as able to self-administer medication, has a lockable space in which to store medication, to which suitably trained, designated care staff may have access with the service user's permission.
- 9.3 Records are kept of all medicines received, administered and leaving the home or disposed of to ensure that there is no mishandling. A record is maintained of current medication for each service user (including those self-administering).
- 9.4 Medicines in the custody of the home are handled according to the requirements of the Medicines Act 1968, guidelines from the Royal Pharmaceutical Society, the requirements of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and nursing staff abide by the UKCC Standards for the administration of medicines.
- 9.5 Controlled Drugs administered by staff are stored in a metal cupboard, which complies with the Misuse of Drugs (Safe Custody) Regulations 1973.
- 9.6 Medicines, including Controlled Drugs, for service users receiving nursing care, are administered by a medical practitioner or registered nurse.
- 9.7 In residential care homes, all medicines, including Controlled Drugs, (except those for self-administration) are administered by designated and appropriately trained staff. The administration of Controlled Drugs is witnessed by another designated, appropriately trained member of staff.
- The training for care staff must be accredited and must include:
- basic knowledge of how medicines are used and how to recognise and deal with problems in use;
 - the principles behind all aspects of the home's policy on medicines handling and records.
- 9.8 Receipt, administration and disposal of Controlled Drugs are recorded in a Controlled Drugs register.
- 9.9 The registered manager seeks information and advice from a pharmacist regarding medicines policies within the home and medicines dispensed for individuals in the home.
- 9.10 Staff monitor the condition of the service user on medication and call in the GP if staff are concerned about any change in condition that may be a result of medication, and prompt the review of medication on a regular basis.
- 9.11 When a service user dies, medicines should be retained for a period of seven days in case there is a coroner's inquest.

Daily Life and Social Activities

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 12 TO 15

The fact that individuals have reached a later stage of life does not mean that their social, cultural, recreational and occupational characteristics, which have taken a lifetime to emerge, suddenly disappear. Older people moving into homes will have differing expectations and preferences as to lifestyle within the residential setting. The degree to which, and the way in which, social life is organised within the home, along with the range of activities available, must be set out in the home's information materials (statement of purpose and service user's guide) so that prospective residents get a clear idea of what is on offer. Some people will want an active, well-organised social life; in contrast, others will want a level of privacy and independence from other residents, although looking to the home for resources such as a library, quiet room or a space for religious observance. The capacity for social activity will vary according to the individual and many residents will need special support and assistance in engaging in the activities of daily life. For them, a structured daily life may well be a therapeutic requirement. Other people will search for a home which accommodates people with similar cultural, religious, professional or recreational interests. The standards have to take this wide variation in preferences and capacity into account. The information in the statement of purpose and service user's guide will be crucial in assessing whether a home is providing what it claims it sets out to provide.

Meals and Mealtimes

Residents regard the food they are given as one of the most important factors in determining their quality of life. It is important in maintaining their health and wellbeing. Failure to eat – through physical inability, depression, or because the food is inadequate or unappetising – can lead to malnutrition with serious consequences for health. Care staff should monitor the individual resident's food intake in as discreet and unregimented a way as possible. Care and tact should always be used. The availability, quality and style of presentation of food, along with the way in which staff assist residents at mealtimes, are crucial in ensuring residents receive a wholesome, appealing and nutritious diet. The social aspects of food - its preparation, presentation and consumption – are likely to have played a significant part in most people's lives, and it is important that homes make every effort to ensure this remains so for individuals once they move into care. While it is recognised that many residents will no longer be able to play an active part in preparing food – even snacks and light refreshment – many still want to retain some capacity to do so. In these situations, restriction on access to main kitchens because of health and safety considerations may present problems. It is important that homes look at alternative ways of maintaining residents' involvement - for example, by providing kitchenettes, organising cooking as part of a range of daily activities – and enabling residents to be involved in laying up and clearing the dining rooms if they wish to, before and after mealtimes. Individuals' food preferences, both personal and cultural/religious, are part of their individual identity and must always be observed. These should be ascertained at the point where an individual is considering moving into the home and the home must make it clear whether or not those preferences can be observed. Homes must not make false claims that they can properly provide kosher, halal, vegetarian and other diets if they cannot observe all the requirements associated with those diets in terms of purchase, storage, preparation and cooking of the food.

Complaints and Protection

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 16 TO 18

The following section addresses the matter of how residents and/or their relatives and representatives can make complaints about anything which goes on in the home, both in terms of the treatment and care given by staff or the facilities which are provided. It deals with complaints procedures within the home relating to matters between the resident and the proprietor or manager. Complainants may also make their complaints directly to the National Care Standards Commission.

Whilst it is recognised that having a robust and effective complaints procedure which residents feel able to use is essential, this should not mean that the opportunity to make constructive suggestions (rather than complaints) is regarded as less important. Making suggestions about how things might be improved may create co-operative relationships within the home and prevent situations where complaints need to be made from developing. However, it is important to remember that many older people do not like to complain – either because it is difficult for them or because they are afraid of being victimised. If a home is truly committed to the principles outlined in earlier sections of this document, an open culture within the home will develop which enables residents, supporters and staff to feel confident in making suggestions and for making complaints where it is appropriate without any fear of victimisation. The NCSC will look to the quality assurance process and service user survey (Standard 33) for evidence of an open culture.

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 19 TO 26

The links between the style of home, its philosophy of care and its size, design and layout are interwoven. A home which sets out to offer family-like care is unlikely to be successful if it operates in a large building with high numbers of resident places. It would need special design features - being divided into smaller units each with its own communal focus, for example, - to measure up to its claim to offer a domestic, family-scale environment. On the other hand, someone looking for a 'hotel'-style home, may prefer a large home with more individual facilities than could be offered by the small family-style home.

Where special needs are catered for, the design and layout of the physical environment are crucial. People with a high level of visual impairment will require particular design features to help them negotiate the environment, many of which may be advantageous to all older people, but will be essential to them. Older people with learning disabilities may have been used to living in small group homes and other small scale settings when they were younger (at least since the development of community care policies) and are likely to prefer a continuation of that style of living as they get older. People with dementia have particular needs for the layout of communal space and associated signage which aid their remaining capacity. Other older people, however, could find some of these features patronising.

The onus will be on proprietors to make clear which clientele their homes are aimed at and to make sure the physical environment matches their requirements. This section does not seek to set out detailed standards to meet the wide variety of needs exhibited by different client groups. Proprietors will have to meet the claims they make in their statement of purpose in respect of these. Nevertheless, although the physical character of homes will vary according to the needs of their residents, there are certain standards of provision common to all homes and which must be met.

Staffing

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 27 TO 30

The national minimum standards apply to the wide range of residential and nursing homes which exist in England. It is necessary to achieve a balance between drawing up standards which are specific enough to avoid the need for local negotiation, but which are broad enough to apply to the diverse nature of the clientele catered for (eg those who are physically frail; those who have dementia). Drawing up standards for staffing exemplifies some of the greatest difficulties of this kind. Where residents have a high level of physical dependency (in relation to capacity to perform the activities of daily living), staffing levels will need to reflect the needs of those residents. Where they require significant nursing attention, the skill mix of the staffing establishment must be adjusted accordingly. Residents with dementia also require care from appropriately skilled staff - and so on. In determining appropriate staffing establishments in all care homes, and in nursing care homes in particular, the regulatory requirement that staffing levels and skills mix are adequate to meet the assessed and recorded needs of the residents at all times in the particular home in question must be met.

This section, therefore, does not lay down detailed specifications for staffing to cover all situations but it does set out some baseline standards which should apply as minimum to all settings. Each home must then determine the appropriate staffing levels and skills to meet the assessed needs of its own particular residents, which will then be approved by the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC).

See: Burton, J (1998); Payne, C (1994); Residential Forum (1997).

Management and Administration

INTRODUCTION TO STANDARDS 31 TO 38

The quality of care provided in a care home is strongly influenced by the calibre of the registered manager and their relationship with the registered provider (or owner) of the home, where these are not one and the same person.

This section sets out the standards relating to the qualities and qualifications required of the person in day to day control of the delivery of care, and how they should exercise their responsibilities.

Both the regulations and the standards highlight the importance of consulting service users about their health and personal care, interests and preferences. A competent, skilled manager is adept at fostering an atmosphere of openness and respect, in which residents, family, friends and staff all feel valued and that their opinions matter.

The requirement to have a quality assurance system formalises this process. It is not essential to subscribe to an external system, although many providers do and there are plenty of good examples to choose from. A key requirement of these standards is that service users are surveyed for their opinions and that the results of the survey are published.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This note is not part of the Regulations)

These Regulations are made under the Care Standards Act 2000 ("the Act") and apply to England only. Part I of the Act establishes, in relation to England, the National Care Standards Commission ("the Commission") and Part II provides for the registration and inspection of establishments and agencies, including care homes, by the Commission. It also provides powers for regulations governing the conduct of establishments and agencies. The majority of Parts I and II of the Act (in so far as not already in force) will be brought into force on 1 April 2002.

These new arrangements replace the regulatory system provided for in relation to residential care homes and nursing homes by the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Regulation 3 excludes from the definition of a care home under section 3 of the Act certain NHS hospitals and establishments providing nursing, universities, schools and certain further education institutions.

Under regulations 4 and 5, each home must have a statement of purpose consisting of the matters set out in Schedule 1, and supply a guide to the home to each service user.

Regulations 7 to 10 make provision about the fitness of the persons carrying on and managing the home, and require satisfactory information to be available in relation to certain specified matters. Where an organisation carries on the home, it must nominate a responsible individual in respect of whom this information must be available (regulation 7). Regulation 8 prescribes the circumstances where a manager must be appointed for the home, and regulation 10 imposes general requirements in relation to the proper conduct of the home, and the need for appropriate training.

Part III makes provision about the conduct of care homes, in particular as to health and welfare of service users, and as to the facilities and services that are to be provided. Provision is also made about record keeping, the staffing of homes, the fitness of workers, and about complaints.

Part IV makes provision about the suitability of premises and fire precautions to be taken. Part V deals with the management of care homes. Regulation 24 requires the registered person to establish a system for reviewing and improving the quality of care provided by the home. Regulation 25 imposes requirements relating to the home's financial position. Regulation 26 requires the registered provider to visit the home as prescribed. Part VI makes special provision which applies where children are accommodated at the home.

Part VII deals with miscellaneous matters including the giving of notices to the Commission. Regulation 43 provides for offences. A breach of the regulations specified in regulation 43 may found an offence on the part of the registered person. However, no prosecution may be brought unless the Commission has first given the registered person a notice which sets out in what respect it is alleged he is not complying with a regulation, and what action the Commission considers it is necessary for him to take in order to comply. The notice must specify a time period for compliance, not exceeding three months.
